

The Federal Communications Commission
445 12th Street, SW
Washington, DC 20554

Dear The Federal Communications Commission,

People who use the network more are getting more benefit from the telephone infrastructure. So why should people who use the network less be asked to pay the same USF fee as those who use the network more? I am concerned that a flat approach to the USF fee will not be fair, and will hit the average Joe hardest.

Is the flat fee idea just another example of finding ways to shift costs away from business and onto the consumer? Sure looks like it. I'm sorry, but I don't agree that what's good for GM is automatically good for the country.

Sincerely,

Kenton Machina
25385 White Tail Trce
Lexington, Illinois 61753-7556